

Because of the misprint in our last issue and the possible confusion regarding 5th District Candidates and their parties, we are highlighting the candidates here on our front page. We greatly appreciate the many supportive readers who took the time to let us know of the misprint! Thank you!

The Race for Indiana's 5th U.S. Congressional District

The Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee listed the 5th District as one of its 2020 target districts and included Hale in its Red-to-Blue Program. Spartz was included in the National Republican Congressional Committee's Young Guns program.

The outcome of this race will affect partisan control of the U.S. House of Representatives in the 117th Congress. All 435 seats in the House are up for election. As of September 2020, the Democratic Party is in the majority, holding 232 seats to Republicans' 198 seats. The Libertarian Party has one seat. Four seats are vacant. As a result, the Republican Party would need to gain at least a net 20 seats in 2020 to win control of the chamber. ▲

As a life-long Hoosier, I know the challenges so many people in our community face when it comes to accessing affordable health care, good-paying jobs, child care, and a quality education – because I experienced those same hardships myself. I was a single mom who paid her way through school and worked multiple jobs to support my son. Those were difficult times, but they led me to my career in public service, where I dedicate myself to fighting for children and families. That's why I'm running for Congress – so that I can take that fight to Washington. I want to be an advocate for our working families and a voice for everyone in this district. And I know that starts with listening to and empowering our communities of color. That's something I'm committed to doing.

Pike Township is critical to our efforts to flip the 5th District to the Democratic Party and bring competent, caring, and responsive leadership back to this community. That's why we have a dedicated field organizer in Pike Township to engage potential voters and provide them with the information they need to cast their ballot. And when we win, we will have a strong constituent services program that will listen to and address the concerns of our community, just as I had as a State Representative in the General Assembly.

If you'd like to learn more about my campaign or want to volunteer, you can visit <https://haleforcongress.com/get-involved> or email us at volunteer@haleforcongress.com.

Victoria Spartz

Victoria has a proven track record in the business world, civic organizations and the public sector. In many ways, she embodies the American Dream: born overseas, immigrated to the USA after meeting her Hoosier husband on a train in Europe, became a US Citizen, and worked her way up from bank teller to a CPA, finance executive and business owner.

Growing up in Ukraine, she knows the dark side of socialism. This molded her conservative political philosophy: limited government is always better, and financial and healthcare decisions should be made by individuals in a free market, not by bureaucrats with special interests.

Victoria has worked in the Big 4 public accounting firms for Fortune 500 companies, as an adjunct professor at IU's Kelley School of Business and served as CFO at the Indiana Attorney General's Office. She currently owns businesses offering financial consulting, farming and real estate services.

In 2017, when her local state senator announced he would retire, Victoria was encouraged to seek the District 20 seat and was elected to fill the remainder of the term.

She is a Senator who tackles tough issues and challenges the status quo. She fought to repeal needless regulations, reform health care, improve educational outcomes, audit elections, protect the Second Amendment and private property rights, and bring transparency and accountability to government.

Victoria and her husband, Jason, a lifelong resident of Hamilton County, reside in Noblesville with their two daughters. ▲

I'm a guy from Indiana. I was born here and educated here. I have lived in Cedar Lake, Crown Point, Muncie, West Lafayette, Castleton, Fishers, and now Westfield. My mom was a working mother of two with just a high school diploma by the time she could legally drink. Thanks to my younger siblings, I learned early that having kids was hard work and expensive. Because I was 10 years older, I was a live-in baby sitter during my teenage years, which kept me out of trouble, close to home, and strengthened my belief that having a kid when you're still a kid leads to a hard life. I've lived in trailers, apartments, a townhouse, rental homes, and finally my dream of a single family home now.

My mother and grandma were the center of our family and are/were amazing women. Sports and some sound advice from my high school guidance counselor and "Coach" gave me an opportunity to pursue a college diploma.

My wife and I decided my 11-year teaching career with Noblesville Schools had to end. My salary was slightly more than child care for our daughters. I loved teaching, but my wife makes enough money for us. We discussed my continuing to help other peoples' kids or focus on molding the minds of our kids. Now, I am loving every moment of this amazing adventure of staying at home with our two daughters.

And I am motivated to leave a positive mark on our State, Nation, and Planet. Please feel free to follow along with whatever is to come from "a guy from Indiana."

Hoosier Voting Made Easier with The Indiana Citizen

by Diana Lamirand, Freelance Writer in Noblesville, IN, who gave us permission to rework and reprint her article.

Indiana has been in the bottom 10 states for voter turnout in four of the last five elections. It ranks in the bottom 10 for civic literacy.

The Indiana Citizen (TIC), IndianaCitizen.org, has begun a statewide campaign to connect with eligible voters and provide election information via one online resource. It was founded with the goal of reaching 750,000 of the state's estimated 1.7 million unregistered voters and to provide the support they need to register, understand the issues, know the candidates, and show up to vote.

"We need to reach voters with the message that no matter where they stand politically, it's crucial that they participate in the process. The health of our democracy depends on it," said Bill Moreau, 67, of Indianapolis, a retired lawyer and cofounder of the Indiana Citizen.

Moreau and his wife, Ann, 73, share a passion for civic engagement. Together they came up with the idea for The Indiana Citizen, a nonpartisan, unbiased platform through which voters in all of the state's 92 counties can easily find information about local candidates' positions.

Many online resources inform citizens about how to register to vote, where to vote and who's on the ballot, but determining each candidate's stance on key issues can be more challenging.

THE INDIANA CITIZEN

THE CROSSROADS OF CIVIC ENGAGEMENT

Fighting voter apathy

Voter apathy is a multigenerational problem, said Kevin Morgan, a veteran journalist and director of digital content at TIC.

"Participation could be higher in every age group. None is anywhere close to 100 percent," Morgan observed. "From our review of available data, it appears those 65 and older participate at higher rates."

"We concluded we should try to encourage our fellow Hoosiers to vote, without caring how they will vote," Moreau said.

This led to registering The Indiana Citizen as a nonprofit 501(c)(3), "so we are strictly and scrupulously nonpartisan in our focus." To date, the organization has about 300 donors.

Morgan said he'll apply the same standards of excellence in compiling voter information for all 92 counties that he did throughout his decades-long career as an editor and reporter responsible for unbiased election coverage at The Indianapolis Star.

The Indiana Citizen hopes to deliver voters to the polls. Visit indianacitizen.org to learn more. ▲

How to Vote:

What You Need to Know

Procedures for the election:

- Absentee Voting: Voters will need an approved reason for casting an absentee ballot by mail. Being age 65 or older or having a disability qualify as valid reasons.
- Early in-person voting will begin Oct. 6, helping voters avoid crowded Election Day polling places.
- There's an online portal for voters, <https://indianavoters.in.gov/>, which makes it easy to register to vote or to request a mail-in ballot.

Other things to know:

How do I register to vote?

Register online, <https://indianavoters.in.gov/>, using a valid Indiana driver's license or Indiana State Identification Card. You can also complete a voter registration form and mail it in or bring it to your county's voter registration office — the City-County Building. The deadline for registering is Oct. 5.

How can I get an absentee ballot?

The last day to request a mail-in ballot is Oct. 22. Mail-in ballots must be received by your county clerk's office by noon on Election Day, Tuesday, Nov. 3.

Any registered Indiana voter is eligible to vote early through the absentee-in-person voting — you don't need a specific reason. Simply visit your county clerk's office beginning Oct. 6 and vote.

To cast an absentee ballot by mail you must indicate one of the state's approved list of reasons.

Is my absentee ballot secure?

The Indiana Election Commission, in partnership with Ball State University and its Voting System Technical Oversight Program, the Indiana University Center for Applied Cybersecurity Research, certifies every voting system in the State.

When is Election Day?

When are polls open?

Tuesday, Nov. 3.

Polls are open from 6 A.M. to 6 P.M.

Can I vote before Election Day?

Yes. Any registered voter may vote early, in-person, with no application required. The first day to vote absentee-in-person is Oct. 6.

What form of identification do I need to vote?

You need a valid Indiana driver's license, Indiana photo ID, U.S. passport or U.S. military ID.

What is being done to make polling places safe from coronavirus?

The state provides personal protective equipment (PPE) to all 92 counties, including masks, hand sanitizer and gloves.

Will I be able to vote in the same place as I always have?

Not necessarily. Fewer election workers and COVID-19 shutdowns of government buildings, churches, schools and other sites may have forced your county to change or combine polling places.

What are the main races being voted on in Pike Township?

- U.S. President
- U.S. Congressional House: Districts 5 and 7
- Judge Seats
- Governor
- Attorney General
- State Senate District 33
- State House Districts 86 and 94
- Marion County Coroner, Surveyor, and Treasurer
- Pike Township School Board
- Pike Township Board Member

Some Good News in the Battle Against COVID-19

An interview with Dr. Anthony Fauci, Director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases by Alexis Madrigal at the Atlanta Festival, Sept. 23. Edited for print by BBBrown.

How is the USA Doing?

Alexis Madrigal: More than 200,000 Americans have died from coronavirus so far. In March your estimate was 100,000 to 200,000 Americans would die from COVID-19. How do you evaluate the U.S. response?

Dr. Anthony Fauci: The numbers speak for themselves. We got hit very badly in the Northeastern part of the country, namely the New York metropolitan area. At that time, it was accounting for almost half of all the infections, hospitalizations, and deaths. And then they turned around and came back down to a baseline that is low, and it has stayed low, which is good. They've suffered terribly. But right now, they're in a good place.

We started to open the economy, which we needed to do, because you can't stay shut down indefinitely. But as we tried to open the country again, the states' responses were variable. Some did not adhere to the guidelines we put forth.

Starting off, we set a certain checkpoint to start phase one, phase two and then phase three. Some tried, but the people in the states and the cities didn't always follow the guidelines. They went around without masks and congregated at bars. The baseline was at about 20,000 cases per day, which is unacceptably high. It went up gradually 30, 40, 50, and at one point was over 70,000 cases a day. Then as things started to turn around and people realized they really needed to do some of the things we've been saying, it came down to around 30 to 40. But right now, the baseline is still stuck at between 35 and 40,000 a day. That's not good, no matter how you slice it, that's not good.

There are parts of the country that are doing very well by following the simple public health measures:

1. universal wearing of masks,
2. physical distancing,
3. avoiding crowds,
4. doing things outdoors more than indoors, and
5. washing your hands.

That sounds very simplistic, but we know when we do that consistently, we prevent surges and we turn them around.

The concern I have now is we're entering into the fall and into the winter. There's going to be more indoor things than outdoor things. I would like to see the baseline of daily infections come way, way down and not be stuck at around 30 to 40,000 per day, which is where it is right now.

Alexis Madrigal: So, your news today is our baseline is too high as we're heading into the winter. I've heard some mention this is the beginning of a "new wave," and what about vaccines?

A "New Wave" Will Not Happen

Dr. Anthony Fauci: The new wave thought is based on what happened in the 1918 pandemic. There were cases in the spring of 1918, and the flu disappeared in the summer. But in the fall, there was a second wave. It went from essentially nothing to an enormous wave that was far worse than the original outbreak.

Talking about waves does not fit what's happening today. We're looking at 40,000 new cases per day. That's unacceptable, and we've got to get that number down before we go into the winter.

A Vaccine Will Happen

Vaccines are critical. And that's a good news story thus far.

I'm cautiously optimistic about that because we have three vaccine candidates in phase three trial already, and a fourth will very shortly go into phase three trial. They're involving a large number of individuals anywhere from 30,000 to 60,000.

By the time we get into the late fall and early winter — November and December — we will know whether a vaccine is safe and effective. There's never a guarantee you're going to get a safe and effective vaccine, but I'm cautiously optimistic looking at the initial data from some of the phase one trials. How successful will it be? The only way to know is to look at the results of the clinical trials.

The other good news is the federal government has already made a major investment to make doses of the vaccine ready when a vaccine is determined to be safe and effective. So, we won't have to wait months for the vaccine. If we get an answer, let's say in November or December, we can start vaccinating people. We'll start with the healthcare workers and the vulnerable — the elderly and those with underlying conditions.

Operation Warp Speed

Alexis Madrigal: You've become more optimistic about the vaccine time-line. And it really does seem like the vaccine development and the production program, Operation Warp Speed, is a bright spot in the American response. Did that program speed up vaccine development?

Dr. Anthony Fauci: Let me backtrack and correct something. I have not become more optimistic. In January when I was asked when we might have a vaccine, I said it would take a year. A year from January is December. I haven't changed anything. So, let's keep that for the record.

The other thing is the program called Operation Warp Speed. We need to clarify that the program name makes it sound like we're rushing things recklessly. We're not.

We've done things in a very fast pace based on two things: 1. utilization and 2. taking advantage of scientific and technological advances in vaccine platform technology. We went from the sequence of a virus to a phase one trial within a couple of months. That has never been done that quickly before.

We're Not Sacrificing Safety

And now, seven months later, we're in a phase three trial. The fact we are in a phase three trial now is not a testimony to cutting corners but utilizing the technological advances that we have. That's not sacrificing safety or scientific integrity.

That's the reason I sound optimistic. The things I hoped for in January have worked out. That's the reason why I might sound more up about it, because the results that we have do look good.

Alexis Madrigal: I want to ask you this directly, just so you have a chance to answer it: Will the announcement of a vaccine come on the administration's political time-line?

A Political Time-line?

Dr. Anthony Fauci: No. No, and I can tell you why. Only the data will determine the timing of the announcement. Each of these trials has a data and safety monitoring board, which is a group of people who are qualified scientists, qualified ethicists, qualified statisticians, and who will look at the data at intermittent times and determine one of four things:

1. They'll say, "We don't have enough data to say it's working. Continue the study."
2. Or they'll say, "The way this data distributed, we're never going to get a clear answer. It's a futile study."
3. Or they may say, "We're seeing more infections in the vaccine group than the placebo group, we better stop this dangerous trial!"
4. Or, "We're starting to see that the vaccine is working."

The only person who sees that data is an unblinded statistician on the data safety monitoring board. That person is beholden to no one; not to the FDA, not to the President, not to me, and not to the company. When they look at the data, and if it looks good, then they tell the company. Then the company makes the decision to go to the Federal Department of Agriculture (FDA) and apply either for an emergency use authorization or actually for licensure, a BLA (Biologics License Application). The FDA then examines that and reviews it with an advisory board. The data becomes public and transparent so that scientists like myself, my colleagues, and people like Dr. Francis Collins, the Director of the National Institutes of Health (NIH), will be able to see that data. So, any decision about a vaccine is going to be very transparent. If a politician tries to make an end run, it's going to be clearly obvious.

Alexis Madrigal: Got it. There have been fears and confusing statements concerning changing the Centers for Disease (CDC) guidance, on U.S. Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) messages. There's even been direct political editing of the CDC's Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report.

But people trust you. You're the most trusted person on coronavirus. But where else should Americans go for information they can trust?

Dr. Anthony Fauci: You know, it's unfortunate about what happened with public views of the CDC. There was an undermining individual in the department who is no longer there. The person who was trying to influence the Pike Pulse is honored to advertise Bryan Fonseca's theatre, and look forward to sharing the theatre's offering to Pike Township in the future. We were shocked to hear of his passing and offer our sincere condolences to his family, co-workers, and associates.

Bryan Fonseca Obituary

Bryan Fonseca, a leading theater producer who challenged audiences with cutting-edge plays and was one of the city's first to stage a show during the coronavirus pandemic, died on Sept. 16. He was 65. The cause was complications of COVID-19.

Mr. Fonseca co-founded the Phoenix Theater in 1983 and led it for 35 years. It was a home for productions that might never have found a place on the city's half-dozen or more mainstream stages. His shows included Terrence McNally's exploration of a group of gay men, "Love! Valour! Compassion!" — which attracted picketers — "Human Rites," by Seth Rozin — which deals with female circumcision — and unconventional musicals like "Urinetown" and "Avenue Q."

"Bryan's legacy as a cultural icon and his vision to give voice to and celebrate the minority communities of Indianapolis through the prism of purposeful theater and civic engagement will live on through the Fonseca Theatre," said Frank Basile, founding donor and board member of the Fonseca Theatre, 2508 W. Michigan St.

"Bryan's influence and contributions extend well beyond Indianapolis theatre circles," said board president Patricia Castañeda. He was truly a friend to all, and a national treasure. The board is committed to the continuation of the Fonseca Theatre Co. and will be following Bryan's decision to take a break in our production through Spring 2021."

He started the Fonseca Theater Company which champions work by writers of color and has a largely nonwhite staff.

"Mr. Fonseca was committed to diversity because he believed it made his productions stronger," said Jordan Flores Schwartz, Associate Producing Director. She added, "He was a force for good in the lives of many, many people. At times his choices were too controversial for the leaders of this conservative community," and that cost him corporate and foundation sponsors. "His personal mission was to bring diverse work to Indianapolis, because he firmly believed we deserved that, too."

After the pandemic closed theaters across the country in March, Mr. Fonseca brought live performance back to Indianapolis in July with a socially distanced production — in the theater's parking lot — of Idris Goodwin's "Hype Man: A Break Beat Play," which centers on the police shooting of an unarmed young Black man. "He always believed theater had the power to unite people," Ms. Schwartz said.

Fonseca Theatre took precautions — audience members were required to wear face coverings, and actors performed far apart from one another — but "Hype Man" was forced to close a week early when one actor became sick. He was tested for the virus, but the theater could not divulge the results, citing privacy reasons. "We won't put anyone — actors, crew, volunteers and, most importantly, you — at risk," Mr. Fonseca wrote to his audience in a Facebook post announcing the cancellation. A month later, the theater returned with a second outdoor production, Terrance Arvelle Chisholm's "Hooded, or Being Black for Dummies," which concluded on Aug. 30.

Bryan Douglas Fonseca was born on Oct. 10, 1954, in Gary, to Manuel and Aggie Fonseca. His father was a railroad worker, his mother a homemaker. Mr. Fonseca became the first in his family to attend college, studying sociology and theater at Indiana University Northwest in Gary, where he also started a storefront theater. He moved to Indianapolis in 1978, and received his bachelor's degree from IUPUI.

He is survived by his father; his brothers, Kevin and Bob; and a sister, Hollye Blossom.

Mr. Fonseca had a penchant for loud shirts, authentic Day of the Dead art, puppies, the music of John Prine and Christmas music (which he felt could start in as early as August). He was also a taskmaster, Ms. Blossom said. "If you were going to be in a play with him, you were going to work," she said. "But after he got done yelling, everyone would go out for tequila together."

Co-Officers of the Month: Kendall - Patrick

I am honored and take pleasure in recognizing Sgt. Kevin Kendall and Officer Mariah Patrick as Co-Officers of the Month. Commander Lorenzo Lewis

Officers were dispatched to Eagle Creek Park located at 7840 W. 56th St. on report of two missing autistic children. Upon arrival Sgt. Kevin Kendall spoke with the mother of the children and gathered pertinent information to coordinate a search. Sgt. Kendall then requested the assistance of the Pike Fire Department and other assisting units. Shortly thereafter one of the assisting officers was flagged down near the 71st entrance to the park by a concerned citizen who had located one of the missing children.

Officer Mariah Patrick, working off information provided by Sgt. Kendall took it upon herself to search and walk several hundred yards into the woods. Subsequently, officer Patrick located the other missing child by a large body of water, safe and unharmed.

While this type of incident certainly requires a great deal of manpower and teamwork, Sgt. Kevin Kendall and Officer Mariah Patrick were directly instrumental in the recovery of both children. The quick response, detailed communication, and due diligence proved to be paramount in preventing tragedy.

This incident serves as the epitome of what it means to protect and serve. Their actions are a great credit to themselves, the Indianapolis Metropolitan Police Department, and the City of Indianapolis. ▲

Rophe Free Clinic is a non-profit organization that provides free, quality, Christ-Centered healthcare to uninsured and underinsured residents of Pike Township. Volunteer healthcare providers from the medical community see residents by appointment on Saturdays from 8 AM to noon. The Clinic is located on the grounds of Solid Word Bible Church, 4374 W. 42nd St.

Rophe Free Clinic opened in June, 2018, and focuses on primary care such as preventative and non-life-threatening acute care. The dedicated volunteer medical team and staff provide accessible and reliable healthcare services to Pike Township residents. The ultimate goal is to obtain healthcare insurance for patients. The Clinic provides social services, and the pharmacy staff dispenses medications prescribed by Clinic providers free of charge.

Many local residents who cannot afford high co-pays or deductibles may go undiagnosed and untreated for long periods of time. These residents become long-term patients of the Clinic. Additionally, health insurance is not an option for many in the growing immigrant population. When having to choose among food, shelter, and healthcare, these populations are the most likely to forgo needed medication and medical care. Leaving health conditions untreated is a large contributor to chronic health conditions and the healthcare disparity. Rophe supports residents by helping them overcome the financial barrier of getting quality healthcare.

During the height of COVID-19, the Clinic's high-risk COVID-19 patients were safely supplied with enough medications to follow Indiana's Stay-At-Home order. Without proper interventions and medication management, these patients would have experienced more health complications, including those associated with COVID-19. The Clinic's goal during the pandemic is to prevent hospitalization of high-risk patients and increase quality of life by managing acute and chronic illnesses during these challenging times.

The Clinic routinely provides residents with toiletries, non-perishable food items, clothing, and transportation to medical appointments. Rophe also periodically sponsors mammogram screenings and vaccination clinics for residents. Rophe recently had a Back-to-School Safety Campaign educating children on COVID-19 and providing them with lunch bags, health items and safety supplies. Fourth-Year Professional Pharmacy students have been instrumental in assisting the Clinic with implementing health fairs and providing services to residents.

There's a sense of pride when I encounter people of color who have immersed themselves into entrepreneurship and operated successful businesses — especially during such turbulent times. The opportunity to cast their enterprises into the spotlight and share their business efforts with our township is an opportunity for us to respond and support them on a greater and broader scale.

Andre'a Crowder

I started Robin's Sweet Treats in honor of my mother, Robin Hunter. Together, we would bake and create dessert tables for baby showers, birthday parties, small family functions, etc.... Everyone knew it was our thing.

We talked about starting a business together. Unfortunately, we weren't able to do it. She passed away, unexpectedly, on May 1, 2016, of Sickle Cell Disease. A couple years after she passed I decided to go ahead and start the business we had long talked about. I named Robin's Sweet Treats after her, in honor of her. We offer baked goods, i.e. cookies, cake pops, decorated Oreo's, s'more and candy tables. I currently work out of my home. However, I am planning to expand in the near future.

I know that COVID has been devastating small businesses, however it has actually helped mine. People being at home more want sweets, and I have been able to provide that; making sure everything is done as safely as possible while practicing social distancing.

I know there is a concern when it comes to cleanliness, especially in the midst of this pandemic. I want to assure all my buyers that all the supplies I use are thoroughly sanitized, I wear gloves, and a face mask. I offer porch pick-up or porch delivery to assure that we are practicing social distancing as well.

Two Entrepreneurs

Armita Williams - Pike Pulse Staff Writer

Andre'a Crowder

I make delivering and pick-up easy for customers. I give them a time frame of when I will deliver their order, or when they can pick up. If I'm delivering, I always text or e-mail to let them know their order has been delivered.

All my customers have expressed how happy they are that I am practicing social distancing. I personally don't want to put anyone in any kind of harm, and I don't want to put myself or my family in any harm. We make it work.

Currently, I run the Robin's Sweet Treats alone. I do my own publicity and marketing. I've built my own website, and I try to post on social media frequently. My website is www.RobinsSweetTreat.com and my email is RobinsSweetTreat@gmail.com. My Facebook is www.Facebook.com/RobinsSweetTreat. I am also on Instagram.

"Like" my pages because I sometimes do free giveaways. Who doesn't love free cookies! I do this as a way of trying to get my name out there. It has helped me thus far and I know it will help me going forward.

On a personal note, I am a stay-at-home wife and mother. I have a two-year-old toddler and twin one-year-old's. Right now, they all look at me like "OH! COOKIES!" They don't really understand what I'm doing and why I'm doing it. I'm hoping that one day, one of them will want to take over the business.

In the beginning, "this new normal" was really difficult. I would always be out somewhere with my children. We would have playdates, or go to story time at the library in hopes to get them interacting with other kids. When COVID hit, it was extremely difficult for myself and my oldest child. She was so used to getting out and going places daily. Now, it's becoming a lot easier.

COVID has slowed me down, which hasn't been so bad. I was Go! Go! Go! Go! Go! Go! all the time. I've tried to find ways to entertain my children at home. We often play outside, go for walks and things like that. There are learning opportunities out there. ▲

Alana Henry

I started my career as a high school English teacher, although my degree was in journalism. After leaving the classroom when I had my first child, I decided to utilize the writing and editing skills I had attained with a little “side hustle” at home. As time went by, I realized I could expand my work into a larger business, which has led me to where I am today.

Growing up, I lived in an area where most of the people didn’t have the resources they needed to excel professionally. I’ve always been really passionate about equity and helping my community, particularly with people who come from a place similar to the urban core where I grew up. I wanted to educate, mentor, train, and truly connect with those people to help them excel. I believe that is what led me to teaching—and ultimately, the business I am in today.

As a teacher, I did projects with my students, including a large unit on how to write resumes, how to map out a career plan, and how to identify goals and plan how to reach them. My students responded well and often discussed how much they appreciated learning about life and opportunities after high school.

So, my resume writing and editing business fell in line with what I cared about. A few years, I asked a fellow stay-at-home mom to join my team. The business has continued to grow from there, expanding even more a year and a half ago.

COVID-19 has provided a unique opportunity for my business because so many people are unemployed and seeking jobs. Over the last 6 months, more than 48 million people have filed for unemployment, and I come across many individuals who have either been furloughed or laid off since March. The job market is very volatile, and people are turning to professional help to figure out how to navigate the market and position themselves for success for a job. In particular, many people with jobs in the hospitality industry, restaurants, and retail services are trying to leave for health and safety reasons.

Most focus on finding a job where they can transfer their existing skills. Often, job seekers focus assume resume writing is simple about listing what jobs they’ve had and what they’ve done at those jobs. But a strong resume actually speaks to specific skills and how those skills would benefit any business.

I work on identifying a person’s contributions and their skills. We discuss what they have done to make wherever they have worked a better company, list transferable skills, and highlight how those skills apply to the industry they’re pursuing.

There are challenges—depending on the length of the person’s work history—but navigating those challenges is easier for a professional than for someone who’s trying to do it on their own. I have worked with clients who have seen immense success. Some left their current field and entered a different industry. It can be done, despite what we see with the economy and jobs. It is very possible.

I worked with a wonderful woman and her sister, who was one of my more challenging clients. She struggled with identifying a specific job, so we had to work to nail down a focus and target. A month after we finished her resume and cover letter, she reached out and let me know that she was so appreciative of our hard work and our help with her resume. She had gotten her dream job with a pay increase.

Another client had experienced family hardship. She had recently lost a few family members and was dealing with immense stress and grief. She contacted me a few weeks ago to let us know that while we worked on her project, she had those family issues going on. She was so appreciative that we had stuck with her and were patient to try to help steer her on a course that would lead to her success. She was just happy that we were kind, professional, and considerate. She said it is hard to find people who are authentic, and she appreciated it.

Those stories—those sorts of things—they’re touching, and it makes the work feel like it’s worth it.

Both of these women are Afro-Americans, and we do work with a lot of clients of color. As a result of the spotlight on Black business, we’ve had an uptick in people of all ethnicities reaching out and trying to secure our services. Because my business is led by a Black woman, there are women on staff, and I have a diverse team with other Black women. I’ve had people say specifically, “We picked you because we could see you were a Black woman, and you are a part of empowering Black women in business.” They love that, so it is great as well.

As I grew from a solopreneur to a business with a team, I have modeled my team similarly to a newsroom. You’ve got your staff writers, and you’ve got your editing team who looks over their work. A drafted piece works its way all the way up to the associate editor and the editor-in-chief, which is me.

It’s been an interesting transition. In the first five or so years of my business, it was me, writing. But now I’ve taken a step back from handling the bulk of the writing and serve in more of the editor-in-chief role.

Our team works remotely. We have online ordering, talk to clients by phone or their preferred method of communication. We also have Zoom calls with clients and use our own software to manage projects and ensure we know where they are in the process. We collaborate that way and it seems to work really well.

I started making money doing this in 2013 and opened my business officially in 2015.

The first thing a job seeker needs to do is be clear on their focus. Whether they’re going to a professional resume writer, or doing this on their own, they need to be clear about who they are, what they have to offer, and what they’re seeking.

You can use a variety of tools including LinkedIn, which is a great tool to network and to look for positions that might interest you. Sometimes when you’re looking for something, you can be all over the place, but when you’re all over the place and your resume is all over the place, you won’t see the success you hope for. A jack-of-all-trades resume is actually not as ideal as it may seem.

Keep a narrow focus during your job search and be intentional about what you do. Target your efforts and target your resume to a specific job or a specific niche. I see a lot of clients struggling with knowing how to do that.

I think they jump head-first into, “Let me update my resume”. But update it for what? What role are you updating it to target? I think that’s a major disconnect that leads to a lot of wasted time.

If you want to reach out to me, visit my website www.thewritique.com and fill out the contact form. Or, email me at alana@thewritique.com or call 317-207-0224. I’m also on social media, so reach out that way.

I’m wishing all job seekers the best of luck in your efforts. Stay focused! Stay persistent!

Dr. Fauci continued from page 4

CDC and me with e-mails is gone. I never listened to that person. It just didn't bother me. I think we can put that behind us now.

Who Do We Trust?

So, I trust the CDC, and I trust the FDA. The FDA Commissioner, Dr. Stephen Hahn, who has made it very clear the scientists who look at these types of things all the time are going to be the ones who will make the recommendation regarding vaccines.

Alexis Madrigal: There's an entire ecosystem that's really downplaying the pandemic, and have tried to cast doubt on the number of people being infected and dying. What effect do you think those forces have had on the course of the pandemic in this country?

Dr. Anthony Fauci: It's been detrimental because what the general public needs is a message that's consistent and one that they can believe. And what's happened, unfortunately, and I think you have to be asleep not to realize this, is that we are all living in a very divisive society right now. There's no doubt about that. That's not my opinion. That's just obvious from what we see. It's politically charged also. Public health issues and public health recommendations have taken on a "we versus them" approach.

Getting back to the point of motivating people to wear masks, it became a political statement not to wear a mask. People have been threatening me and my family, because I'm saying we should all be doing public health things like wearing a mask and physical distancing. It's as if I'm doing something harmful to them. They interpret it as the public health guideline is hurting them.

The virus, not public health measures, is hurting us all

The public health measures really should be looked upon as a pathway to reopen the economy, to get the country back, and to get employment back. It shouldn't be looked upon as an obstacle.

What I'm talking about is not shutting down. I'm talking about trying to open the economy, but doing it in a measured, careful way, according to the guidelines we carefully put forth. If we did that I'm almost certain we would not have seen those surges of cases that brought us up to 70,000 a day and have now plateaued down at 30 to 40,000 a day. I believe if we do that going forward, we're going to see things turn around.

If you look at that big map of our beautiful country, there are certain areas of the country that are doing really well. We need to make those be the models. ▲

MSD Pike Township

When school buildings were directed to close in March due to COVID-19, the MSD of Pike Township immediately launched efforts to ensure that Pike students and their families would have their nutritional needs met. Within a week, Chartwells' Resident District Manager, Jacqueline Blomeke-Griffin, and her team had developed a detailed plan and mobilized to safely serve as many meals as possible during these unprecedented times.

As time went by, this effort expanded to include multiple distribution sites, and incorporated members of the transportation department to assist with delivering meals to several Pike apartment communities. Deborah Washington, who has been a bus driver in Pike since 1996, began helping with the initiative on day one. "It gave me a sense of joy. It was a good feeling to be able to give other people food and help out in a time like this. Families were so appreciative," Washington stated.

Blomeke-Griffin shared, "When our buildings closed, we knew that it was essential to continue to provide breakfasts and lunches to our students. During a typical school day, we offer free universal breakfasts to all of our students and serve approximately 7,000 lunches daily. We also have a supper program, which allows us to provide an additional sacked meal for any after school enrichment programs. Thankfully, Dr. Reichanadter was as determined as we were to avoid any interruption in this service and the state and USDA authorities worked quickly to provide guidance and grant waivers."

"I can't say enough about how incredible my team and our Pike Township colleagues were. My staff worked tirelessly to collaborate and utilize all the resources possible to feed as many students and families within our Community as possible," Blomeke-Griffin said.

"We served over 1 million meals this summer and just received permission to offer free meals to all of our students throughout the end of this calendar year. It's hard to overstate the countless ways this will benefit our Pike families. In addition to serving free breakfast and lunch to all of our in-person learners, we are also hosting a curbside meal distribution at the Pike Freshman Center on Wednesdays from 3 to 7 p.m. We will be providing 5 breakfasts, lunches, and supper meals for any child under 18."

Pike Red Zone

Perhaps no one knows more about the challenges Pike families face than Tonya Monnier. Monnier has been a social worker in Pike for 21 years and serves as the district's McKinney Vento Liaison, which means she focuses on ensuring that homeless students receive the services and support they need. "During normal times, food insecurity is an issue in most communities. During a pandemic, the number of families needing some form of support increases significantly."

Monnier established the Pike Red Zone Food Pantry in 2013. Typically, the pantry, which provides food and personal hygiene items, has served 50 families per month. Since

Tonya Monnier

March, it has served 3,217 families with 8,729 children. On August 4th alone, the Red Zone served 254 children and 81 families.

The Pike Red Zone's ability to meet this unprecedented need has been made possible by the generosity of the Pike community. Shortly after the onset of COVID-19, there was an outpouring of interest from Pike parents and community members eager to support Pike's efforts to provide assistance to their students and families. The result was an incredible team of dedicated volunteers and over $25,900 in monetary donations.

In addition, local businesses began reaching out. Among them was TRIMEDX, a biotechnology company located on Lakeview Parkway, which donated approximately 400 laptops for students to use for remote learning, and Scott Rice and Marilyn Shulte, the owners of Kay-Leo Urban Farm Inc., kayleourbanfarm.org, a 501c3 nonprofit located on Guion Road, donated over 500 lbs. of organically grown produce to the Red Zone Food Pantry.

Dr. Flora

When reached for comment, Superintendent Reichanadter, who is more commonly referred to as Dr. Flora by students, parents, and staff, shared, "We refer to ourselves as Pike Family. Throughout this difficult time, it has been heartwarming and faith affirming to see so many members of our community come together to demonstrate what those words look like in action. Although the future is filled with uncertainty, our commitment to continuing to serve our students and support our families is unwavering. I want to sincerely thank everyone who has and will play a role in making that possible. Now, more than ever, I am extremely grateful and immensely #PikeProud to serve the MSD of Pike Township." ▲

Should I use my 401(k) to fund my child's college education?

You can, but it isn't your best option. Your 401(k) plan should be dedicated primarily to your retirement.

There are two primary drawbacks to using your 401(k) for college funding. First, if you withdraw funds from your 401(k) before you are 59½, you will owe a 10% premature distribution penalty on the withdrawal. This penalty is in addition to income taxes you will owe on the withdrawal. Second, frequent dips into your 401(k) reduce the amount of money you ultimately have available to reap the benefits of compounding and tax deferral. This, in turn, reduces the overall funds for your retirement.

If you really need to use your 401(k) funds to pay for college, a better option might be to borrow from your plan if your plan allows loans. Plan loans are not taxed or penalized, as long as you repay the funds within a specified time period. But make sure you compare the cost of borrowing college funds from your plan with other finance options. Although interest rates on plan loans may be favorable, the amount you can borrow is limited, and you generally must repay the loan within five years. In addition, some plans require you to repay the loan immediately if you leave your job. Your retirement earnings will also suffer as a result of removing funds from a tax-deferred investment.

If you want to save for college in a retirement vehicle, consider using a traditional IRA or Roth IRA instead. With IRAs, you will not owe a 10% premature distribution penalty on withdrawals you make before age 59½ if the money is used to pay for your child's qualified college expenses. ▲

Pike Township Fire Department's Newest Recruit Class

In our previous Pike Pulse article, I mentioned that we had a new recruit class in the process to become Pike Township firefighters. Today, I can proudly announce that our 2020 recruit class has finally graduated. This recruit class consisted of 12 hard-working, community-driven men. These new firefighters have a diverse working background, from previous firefighting experience, medics, construction, and teaching. During the five months of recruit school, the new class bonded while training and learning about the job. In fact, three of our recruits became dads during recruit school to three healthy sons who were welcomed into the PTFD family. Recruit Allen Hall said, "Even during such a serious, extremely busy time like the fire academy, you can just tell through having these big family moments that Pike is a family oriented organization."

This year's recruit class speaker was Van Muhammad. Van grew up in New York and the events of 9/11 truly changed his life. Van stated, "I grew up playing with fire trucks with dreams of one day becoming a firefighter. I was the kid that waved at every fire truck that drove by because deep down I knew I was looking at real life superheroes. Then 9/11 put my priorities into perspective. In my 2nd week of high school in midtown Manhattan, (I) changed (from) a kid from Brooklyn to a man and my dream into a determination." The members of this year's recruit class have made an oath to serve the community. These are the men that will be helping you in Pike Township by entering your houses when you are sick and need help, coming to your aid if you get into an accident, and saving your life in the case that you are stuck in a fire. These men represent Pike Township, and I couldn't be more proud of them.

These recruits may have all come from different places, but they all had one common goal. To be the best firefighter they can be. Our department believes in the inclusion of everyone, just like we all come from different backgrounds, so do the citizens that we serve, and we will serve them all equally. We do not just respond to emergencies, EMS Runs, Fire Incidents and tactical responses. We have and will continue to be committed to total service to our community. I am proud of this class for meeting the requirements of this great department. I am proud of them for the training they have completed, but I am most proud of them because they are committed to a position of public service. Hard work pays off and dedication always leads to opportunity. After 22 weeks of fire academy focus, this class has graduated with many Indiana State certifications including their National Registry EMT certification. As your Fire Chief, I stand by these recruits and welcome them to The Pike Township Fire Department.
